

Arctic Panorama Lodge Clothing Advise

Dressing for the Arctic Winter: Your Essential Guide

Packing for the Arctic winter isn't just about style—it's about safety and comfort. The key is layering, which traps warmth and allows you to adapt to changing conditions, from a cozy lodge to a northern lights chase under a starry sky.

Follow this layering system:

1. The Base Layer: Your second skin. Choose merino wool or synthetic fabrics that wick moisture away from your body. Avoid cotton, as it holds dampness and will make you cold.
2. The Mid Layer: This is your insulation. A thick fleece or a down/synthetic insulated jacket is perfect for retaining core body heat.
3. The Outer Layer (Shell): Your fortress against the elements. A windproof and waterproof (and breathable) jacket and trousers are non-negotiable to protect against snow, wind, and sleet.

Don't Forget Your Extremities:

- Head: A warm wool beanie that covers your ears is essential.
- Neck: A buff or scarf to protect your neck and face from the biting wind.
- Hands: Mittens are warmer than gloves. Consider thin liner gloves underneath for when you need to use your phone or camera.
- Feet: Insulated, waterproof boots with a good grip are vital. Wear them with thick wool socks—and bring extras!

The Arctic cold is formidable, but with the right clothing, you'll be free to fully enjoy the breathtaking magic of a Norwegian winter.

NOTA BENE: From the moment you arrive at the Arctic Panorama Lodge until you are leaving, we provide our guests with high-quality thermal clothing, including overalls, hats, mittens and boots.